

I feel that it is time to embrace new and updated methods of testing for toxicity that are now available. One such method is the in vitro human cell tests, which can be used to not only reduce, but completely replace testing on animals. It stands to reason that since we have been animal testing for over 20 years, it is time to change our tactics to more modern methods. Not only will this greatly increase the successes of the tests since we would be testing on human cells rather than animals, but it will also end the needless suffering and dying of countless innocent animals. Please, let us step into this new millennium with wisdom, ingenuity, and compassion and completely stop once and for all the testing of products on animals.

Sincerely,

Lori Pribula